

My Work Experience during the Winter Holiday

By Pan Li from BE 0816

The winter holiday has passed. The most unforgettable thing that I still remember now is my part-time job.

It was the first time for me to work as a clothes salesgirl. I felt a little nervous at first. When the customers came, I just stood there and said “welcome” to them, not knowing what else to do.

Then I found that other sellers beside me were very good at introducing products to the customers frequently. I realized that as a seller, I should be more outgoing and warmhearted. It was necessary for me to adapt to the new environment. I became more skilled in the following days. I began to talk with customers and introduce clothes to them. I felt proud of my own improvement.

Other sellers gave me great help during work. A girl named Cheng Ying was very patient and left a deep impression on me. Sometimes, I can't find products in the storehouse at the beginning. She didn't complain to me at all, instead, she taught me how to do it. What's more, she often told me to take it easy, and that everything would go well. I learned much work experience from her.

It was a valuable work experience for me. Apart from the money, the most important thing is that I acquired much knowledge. I learned that “No pains, no gains.” Everything is usually more difficult at beginning; you can not get it until you take it seriously. Never give up when you meet any troubles, just be optimistic and have confidence in yourself. Last but not the least, there is something that seems easy at first sight, but need much attention in order to be finished perfectly.
